Pounamu, greenstone, and New Zealand jade are all names for the same hard, durable highly valued stone, used for making adornments, tools and weapons. Each name is used by different groups. It is valued for its strength, durability, and beauty. However, its value transcends the aesthetic and practical properties. Because of its link with chiefs and peace-making, it is considered to have mana (status) and to be tapu (sacred). The stone is highly treasured by all tribes throughout New Zealand.

Maori believed greenstone had to be gifted for good luck.
